DESCRIPTION: The Field Museum of Natural History overlooks Lake Michigan at the bifurcation of South Lake Shore Dr. at 12th St. (Roosevelt Rd.). The north entrance has a grand vista down Lake Shore Dr. towards the Loop and Grant Park.

The building is 350 ft. wide (n-s) and 700 ft. long. It is constructed of load bearing brick walls surfaced with Georgia white marble. Interior flooring is of hollow tile supported by steel posts and beams. The building contains three floors and a basement set on a 30' high landfill with concrete basement floor laid over a shallow foundation set on 60' pine pillings driven in clusters.

The two monumentally scaled entrances (nis aides) with wide terraced steps lead up to porches with massive Ionic columns. Carytid porches frame both entrances beyond which the walls are articulated with a continuous Ionic colonade two atories in height.

The building is planned according to formal principals with a hugh fentral nave running through the building from north to south. This room is 70' x 280', 76' high, surrounded by a gallery and topped with a segmented flat ekylight ceiling. The main and second floor areas of the two wings are used for exhibition space with the third floor devoted to office space. The basement level houses lunchrooms, a 900 seat theater, small exhibition areas, storage and mechanical facilities.

Most of the interior ornamentation, derived from Greek classiciam as on the exterior, is lavished on the great hall and two small exhibition rooms located at either end of the building to the east and west.

HISTORY: The idea of a natural history museum for Chicago began at the time of the World's Columbian Exhibition as a result of the collections brought together here for the fair. Originally installed in the old Fine Arts building of the Exposition in Jackson Park, the Natural History Museum grew and prospered and by 1902 its directors were looking for a permanent home. Working drawings for a new building were completed in 1906 and a contract to build was let in 1911. Because of a change in location from Jackson Park to Grant Park, construction was delayed until 1915. Further delays were caused by World War I with the museum finally openings its doors to the public in 1921.

It was Marshall Field, a capitalist engaged in the mercantile business who provided the major impetus toward erecting a permanent facility with a pledge of $ 4-million dollars in 1904. Following his death in 1905, Marshall's Younger brother, Stanley, for whom the Great Hall is named, assumed charge of museum planning.

HISTORY CON'T.

Architects for the building were Daniel H. Burnham & Co.; Graham, Burnham and Co.; and Graham, Anderson, Probst & White, The latter two being successors to the original Burnham firm. The chief designers were Daniel H. Burnham and Edward R. Graham.

In designing the building in a Greek Classic style these men followed the wishes of the major donor, Marshall Field, who suggested they follow the style which prevailed at the Columbian Exposition. The model for details of the design was the Erechtheum on the Acropolis at Athens, a building which utilized the caryatid motif and picturesque use of cornice lines brought together at different levels.

All interior and exterior sculpture was executed by Henry Hering.

Early in the 1960's architect Harry Weese added a fountain and made some other minor changes to Stanley Field Hall. This included modernization of an area at gallery level behind the curved staircase on the south end of the hall. There were no major changes in the design of the hall or the remainder of the interior.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Of the monumental classic buildings spected in Chicago during the period when historical accuracy and architectural scholarship were the aims of conventional architecture, the Field Museum is no doubt the largest and may well be the finest. Its immense interior hall remains one of the grandsst interior spaces in the city. The architect, Burnham & Co., and Graham, Anderson, Probst & White, stood at the head of their profession as far as revived classicism was concerned. Siting of this great colonnaded structure at the southern focus of Lake Shore Dr. through Grant Park leaves little to be desired from the urbanistic point of view. As one of the most presigious museums in the world whose name derives from its chief benefactor, himself one of Chicago's most famous merchants, there can be little question of the tremendous significance of the Field Museum for Chicago, Illinois and the Nation.
